The Diplomatic Corps, which kept the ball rolling in the earlier months, is now planning a more brilliant campaign. Dinners, followed by bridge, theater parties, receptions, and dances, will be frequent, and will serve to keep the smart set busy until the retirement of society a few weeks hence for the religious duties of Lent.

A pleasant addition to the Diplomatic Corps, and one who, in a short of the Capital, is Lady Durand, the new chatelaine of the British embassy. Being the wife of a diplomat and having lived, as she expresses it, "in n:any out-of-the-way corners of the world," she has known times of extreme charming, possessing as she does an infinite amount of tact and a most gra-
